

Curriculum Vitae
Bob Salmon

Bob Salmon is the food expert representing small food businesses in the field of standardisation. Bob started his career in management systems at Rolls-Royce. He then moved on to be the Industrial Relations negotiator for one of the British Steel plants. When that plant closed down Bob saw the potential for selling pasteurised goats' milk and started his own business. This grew as he developed the market and he became the sole supplier to several of the large UK supermarkets. As he was one of the largest suppliers of goats' milk in the country he became involved in writing the new UK legislation covering dairies.

After selling that business he was asked to become the food regulations adviser to the Forum of Private Business where he still monitors both the drafting of new legislation and the interpretation of existing rules. Bob was elected to his local County Council where he served two terms in local government. He also is involved in several charity organisations.